PREFACE

IN May 1897, European History Chronologically Arranged from 476 was published. The present handbook is mainly concerned with British History from 55 B.C., and with the growth of the British Empire to the close of the War with Germany in 1919. Special emphasis has been laid (1) upon the relations of England and Wales till the conquest of the latter country by Edward I.; (2) upon the relations of England and Scotland till the Union of the two countries in 1707; (3) upon the relations of England and Ireland till the Union of 1800.

The chief events in the history of the Colonies and in that of the growth of Great Britain's influence in India have been carefully marked. Appendices to illustrate the expansion of Great Britain abroad, the growth of religious liberty and of parliamentary reform have been added. A list of the Ministries since 1801 will be found useful, as will the list of the chief occasions on which foreign troops have landed since 1337 in England, Wales, and Ireland.

Mistakes will, I fear, have been made, and I shall be very grateful to have these brought to my notice.

ARTHUR HASSALL.

The Eighth Century.

During this century—

1. English influence on the Continent was greater than that of the Continent upon England, due to the missionary labours of such men as Willebrord and Wynfrith.

2. The Carolingian Empire was established.

3. The Caliphs of Bagdad were at the height of their power.

4. The Iconoclast emperors declared their independence of the Papacy.

5. The political decline of Northumbria took place. After Aldfrid's death the decline of Northumbria definitely sets in, though Eadbert (737-756) showed vigour.

6. The Mercian dynasty established its supremacy in England.

7. Under the sway of the Saracens 'Spain became,' says Gibbon, 'one of the most prosperous countries in Europe.'

SCOTLAND, IRELAND,
WALES.

ENGLAND.

The Inquest of Sheriffs, 1170.

The complaints which reached Henry in the spring of 1170 on his return from France resulted in the dismissal of a number of Sheriffs—'local magnates,' who were inclined to a feudal administration of justice, and to oppressive acts.

In collecting an aid for the marriage of Henry's daughter, too, the Sheriffs had acted dishonestly.

In place of the Sheriffs dismissed Henry substituted Officers of the Exchequer—'another step towards the concentration of the provincial jurisdiction under the Curia Regis' (Stubbs, Select Charters).

Magna Carta, 1215.

It made few lasting innovations and asserted no new liberties. It is founded upon the Charter of Henry I., but differs from it in that it contains guarantees for the advantage of all classes of free men. The Church obtains confirmation of her ancient liberties; the articles relating to the Barons show a reactionary tendency, e.g. in the matter of the writ Praecipe. Still they limited the power of the King to tax themselves and London.

With regard to the Executive and the National Assembly Magna Carta is Conservative, but a Committee of twenty-five was appointed to watch over John. This supervision John resented, and civil war was the result.

Magna Carta never became the law of the land, and it was the Charter of 1225 (which omitted the guarantee of freedom of election to the Church, as well as Clause 12 of Magna Carta) which 'remained the basis of the law throughout the Middle Ages' (Pollard, History, Oct. 1917, p. 171).

The Effect of the News of Richard II.'s Deposition on the People of Aquitaine.

"Likewise the news of these novelties much abashed the Aquitanes (who were at that time under the English subjection) and plunged their thoughts in great perplexities.

Some were grieved at the infamous blemish of the English nation, . . . others feared the spoyle of their goods, and oppression of their liberties by the Frenchmen . . . but the citizens of Bordeaux were chiefly anguished in respect of Richard II. . . . because he was born and brought uppe within their citie."

The Danger to Aquitaine from the French.

"The Frenchmen were nothing discontented at this discontentment of the Aquitanes, supposing that opportunity was then offered to get into their possession the Dutchie of Guian, if either power or policie were thereto applied.

Lewes, Duke of Bourbon, came down to Angiers, who from thence sent many messengers to the chiefe cities of Guian, and by faire speeches and large promises solicited the people to change allegiance.

On the contrarie side, Sir Robert Knowles, Lieutenant of Guian, endeavoured with all diligence to repress the mutinous, . . . but he profited very little. . . . Neither did the Duke of Burgundy much prevail, when it was considered how ponderous the yoake of France was above the English subjection.

The Result.—Thus stood the Aquitanes upon tickle tearmes between obedience and revolt, as a shippe which the wind driveth one way and the tide another."

[Henry, however, wisely sent Thomas Percy, Earl of Worcester, with an armed force, and he placed strong garrisons in all the chief places.]

WESTERN AND EASTERN EUROPE.

The Capture of James Stuart.

Historians are divided on the question of the actual date of the capture of James. See Dunbar, Scottish Kings, p. 183, for a discussion on this matter.

Parliament of 1406 (Summary).

First Session.

Parliament demands—

- (1) 'Good and abundant governance.'
- (2) The defence of the sea to be entrusted to the merchants.
- (3) Expulsion of aliens.

Second Session.

Parliament secures—

- (1) The nomination of a Council of seventeen.
- (2) The reorganization of the defences of Calais and Ireland.
- (3) Economy in the King's household.
- (4) The audit of the King's accounts.
- (5) Restriction on the King's gifts.

Third Session.

Parliament secures Henry's assent to thirty-one articles and the reform of the County elections.

The Parliament of 1406 represents 'the most advanced principles of medieval constitutional life in England.'

In 1406 'the political position' of Henry IV. 'was probably stronger at this time than it had been since the beginning of the reign.'

From 1407, however, 'may be traced the growth of those germs of domestic discord which were in process of time to weaken the hold of the House of Lancaster upon England, and ultimately to destroy the dynasty' (Stubbs, Const. Hist. vol. iii. p. 57).

1408. The Battle of Bramham Moor.

Northumberland had visited Scotland, Wales, Flanders, and France. Aid from France was no longer possible, so the Earl decided to make a raid on England with any allies that could be obtained. He was joined by the Bishop of Bangor, the Prior of Hexham, and the Abbot of Hailes, and many Yorkshiremen.

Sir Thomas Rokeby, the Sheriff of Yorkshire, prevented him from crossing the Nidd near 1406. Orleans and Burgundy attack Calais (Nov.) and fail.

1407. Murder of Louis of Orleans by Burgundy's agents (Nov. 23).

SCOTLAND, IRELAND,
WALES.

1406. Death of Robert III. of Scotland (April 4). His heir, James I. (Stuart), is a prisoner in England.

James I. is declared King of Scotland at Perth (June).

One of Glyndwr's sons is killed in the battle with Prince Henry (April 23).

Successes of the Prince of Wales in south and mid Wales (July–Nov.).

Glyndwr saves Aberystwyth (Oct.).

1407. James Resby, a Lollard, is burnt for heresy at Perth.

The Prince of Wales is active on both the Welsh and Scottish borders.

Glyndwr, aided by a French force, threatens Worcester.

1408. Continuance of the Welsh war.

Aberystwyth Castle is captured by the Prince of Wales (Nov. 1).

ENGLAND.

1406. Northumberland joins Glyndwr. They make the treaty of Aberdaron for the partition of England (Feb. 28).

Meeting of Parliament—the long Parliament of the reign (Feb. 29).

Capture of James, heir to the Scottish throne (April 4), on his way to France by English sailors.

The plague desolates England.

The Merchant Adventurers receive their first charter.

Parliament meets at Gloucester (Oct.), and the principle that money grants should be initiated by the House of Commons is advanced. It passes severe statutes against the Welsh.

The merchants are relieved from the defence of the sea.

1408. Rebellion and death of the Earl of Northumberland at Bramham Moor (Feb. 19).

The King and Archbishop Arundel work for the settlement of the Great Schism.

CONSTITUTIONAL AND EXPLANATORY NOTES,
PEDIGREES, TERMS OF TREATIES.

Knaresborough, and overthrew him at Bramham Moor near Tadcaster. Northumberland was killed, and after the battle Henry IV., who was at York, condemned the Abbot of Hailes to be hanged, but pardoned the Bishop and the Prior. The victory marks the definite triumph of the Lancastrians over the elder line.

The Year 1408.

This year was a turning-point in Henry's reign, as it saw not only the victory of Bramham Moor but also the capture of Aberystwyth, i.e. a diminution in the strength of Glyndwr; who could no longer hope for the independence of Wales.

From 1408 to the battle of St. Albans, 1455, the Lancastrian line is secure—though Richard of Cambridge's plot, 1415, shows the existence of 'smothered fires.'

The Beauforts (the King's Half-Brothers).

1. John Beaufort, Earl of Somerset, died 1410.
2. Henry Beaufort, Chancellor, Bishop of Lincoln, and Winchester, 1402.
3. Thomas Beaufort, Admiral of England, Marquess of Dorset, 1411.

1410. Predominance of the Prince of Wales and the Beauforts.

Owing to Henry IV.'s continual maladies it would seem that the Prince of Wales now held a leading position in the Council.

The chief questions before it concerned (1) the maintenance of Calais—a costly business; (2) the suppression of the Lollards.

The Chancellorship held by—

Arundel, Jan. 30, 1407, to Dec. 21, 1409.
Thomas Beaufort, Jan. 31, 1410, to Dec. 19, 1411.
Arundel, Jan. 5, 1412, to March 20, 1413.

These changes mark success and failure of the factions in the latter portion of Henry's reign.

The Commons in Henry IV.'s Reign.

'Never before and never again for more than two hundred years were the Commons so strong as they were under Henry IV.' (Stubbs, Const. Hist. vol. iii. p. 72).

The Night before the Battle of Agincourt.

They (the French) were lodged even in the waie by the which the Englishmen must needs passe towards Calis, and all that night after their comming thither, made great cheare, and were verie merie, pleasant, and full of game. The Englishmen also for their parts were of good comfort, and nothing abashed of the matter, and yet they were both hungrie, wearie, sore travelled, and vexed with manie cold diseases. Howbeit reconciling themselves with God by hoossell and shrift, requiring assistance at his hands that is the onelie giver of victorie, they determined rather to die than to yeeld or flee. The daie following was the five and twentieth of October in the yeare 1415, being then fridaie, and the feast of Crispine and Crispinean, a daie faire and fortunate to the English, but most sorrowful and unluckie to the French' (Holinshed's

The Court of Star Chamber.

The Act of 1487 is headed 'Pro Camera Stellata.' This Court probably already existed.

The Basis of a Treaty between Henry VII. and James III. (Nov. 27, 1437).

In the document signed on Nov. 27 three marriages are proposed. James III. was to marry the widow of Edward IV., his son, Prince James, a daughter of Edward IV., and his son, Marquis of Ormonde, another daughter of Edward IV.

The Accession of James IV. to the Throne of Scotland, 1488.

'Under him Scotland issued forth from her northern gloom into the full light of western civilization' (Fisher, The Political History of England, vol. v. pp. 49-50).

James IV. has been styled the 'best of the Stuarts,' and seems to have a good claim to that title. It was due to his personal ability that Scotland not only flourished internally, but once more took part in international affairs.

1489. Many of the stories about Sir Andrew Wood are apocryphal, but the deeds here described are vouched for by Pitscottie.

1488. The Bretons, aided by English, Spanish, and German troops, are defeated by the French in the battle of St. Aubin du Cormier (July 23).

1549. The First Prayer Book.

'This was largely the work of Cranmer, and almost entirely the composition of Englishmen and from English sources' (Hutton, The Church of Great Britain, p. 151).

Religious Risings.

Chiefly in Cornwall and Devon, where the rising was partly social.

The Western Rising.—Battle at Hunington near Exeter.

'Lord Gray had a supply of forces, most Almaine horsemen, and with him came Spinola with his band of Italians, consisting of 300 shot purposed for Scotland, also 300 men were sent home from Reading, so being in all not much above 1000 strong he made head against the seditions' (Sir John Hayward, Kt., The Life and Raigne of King Edward the Sixth, London, 1630).

Social Risings against Enclosures.

These are to be found in Wilts and Somerset, and to a lesser degree in Sussex, Hants, Kent, Gloucestershire, Essex, Herts, Leicestershire, Worcestershire, Rutland, Oxfordshire, Yorkshire. The chief rising was in Norfolk under the Ketts.

The Ketts.

Robert Kett or Ket was hanged in chains upon Norwich Castle, his brother William upon Wimondham Steeple. They had entrenched themselves in a valley called Dussendale, owing to a prophecy that they should fill it with slaughtered bodies, but whether of their enemies or their own it was left uncertain.

The country knusses,
Hot, Dicke and Hick,
With clubbes and clouted shoone,
Shall fill up Dussendale
With slaughtered bodies shoone.

Tennis.

The Church.

Edward VI.'s reign marks a crisis in the history of the Church, as many attempted to break away with its historic past.

The Foreign Policy of Edward's Later Years.

Negotiations with Charles V. Edward was at peace with France, and in the fifth year of his reign he wrote that he would join Charles V. and other States of the Empire in some league against the Turks and against their confederation.

A Description of Edward VI.'s Attainments.

'He attained not only commendable knowledge but speech in the Greek, Spanish and Italian languages . . . he spoke the French tongue perfectly; in the Latin tongue he could declaim upon the suddaine.' He was also learned in 'natural philosophy, logicke, musicke, astronomie, and other liberal sciences' (Sir John Hayward, Kt., The Life and Raigne of King Edward the Sixth, pp. 3, 4, London, 1630).

Edward VI.'s Death.

In the seventh year of his reign, 1553, on Thursday, July 6, Edward died.

The Duke of Northumberland's Designs.

As Edward VI. lay dying at Greenwich the Duke determined to get the Princess Mary into his hands. Letters were therefore sent to her from the Council asking her to come to comfort the king in his sickness. She at once set out, but 'as she was upon the way, and within half a daies journey of London, her foot readie to slip into the snare, she received advice both of the king's desperate estate and of the Duke's designements against her; whereupon she returned in haste to her house at Honeden, where in a short time she heard how unprofitable her journey would have been to London' (Sir John Hayward, Kt., London, see above, pp. 178-179). 'Edward died at Greenwich upon Thursday the sixth day of July in the year 1553. Two days his death was concealed, to open a straight way from the Duke's crooked purposes.'

1629. Politico-Religious Questions.

'The Church question had . . . by this time reached a new stage,' and a dispute had arisen about 'doctrine and discipline.' It was a dispute between those (the majority in the House of Commons) who held Calvinistic doctrines, and those who, like Laud, held the views advocated by Cranmer, Hooker (in his Ecclesiastical Polity), and Andrewes with regard to the continuity of the English Church. This latter party appealed to antiquity and held that episcopacy was a divine institution. The idea of the continuity of the English Church was disliked by Calvinistic dogmatists, who regarded Laud with marked disfavour. Religious as much as political considerations embittered the proceedings of the House of Commons after the murder of Buckingham

The First Writ of Ship-Money, Oct. 20, 1634.

To the mayor, commonalty, and citizens of our city of London and to the sheriffs of the same city, etc. etc.

Its necessity and lawfulness—

- (1) The presence of 'certain thieves, pirates, and robbers of the sea, as well Turks . . . wickedly taking by force and spoiling the ships, goods, and merchandises not only of our subjects but also the subjects of our friends in the sea.'
- (2) England's position as master of the sea endangered.
- (3) London specially interested—as being a city of merchants.
- (4) 'An ancient payment in lieu of personal defence of the realm by sea.'

The necessity of ship-money was obvious owing to the preponderance of the French and Dutch navies. But its imposition was specially unpopular—

1. Direct taxation is always disliked.
2. Ship-money, unlike tonnage and poundage, was a new burden.
3. Its levy was contrary to the Petition of Right.
4. If the practice was continued Charles could become independent of Parliament.

Wentworth's Work in Ireland to the End of 1636.

1. £30,000 had been recovered for the Church.

‘Ireland was excluded from the Colonial trade, and the importation of Irish cattle into England was forbidden between July 1 and December 20 of each year (Bagwell, Ireland under the Stuarts, vol. iii. p. 69, London, Longmans & Co.). By this Act the trade with England in fat cattle was destroyed.

1663. The Derwentdale Plot.

It was first formed in 1662 and was one of many similar ones in various parts of England. It was caused by ‘the disappointment felt by Presbyterians, Quakers, Anabaptists, and other sectaries’ at the Clarendon legislation. The special object of this plot was ‘to destroy Parliament and murder all Bishops, Deans, and Chapters, and all other ministers of the Church; to break all organs . . . to destroy the Common Prayer Book, and to pull down all churches.’ Sir Thomas Gower, High Sheriff of Yorkshire, was mainly instrumental in seizing the ringleaders and suppressing the conspiracy. Similar action was taken in Bristol, Cheshire, Lancashire, Wilts, and Nottingham (Royal Hist. Soc. vol. xi.).

1664. Taxation of the Clergy.

The Return of English Soldiers from the Service of Louis XIV., 1675.

An exciting debate took place on May 10 in the House of Commons on the question of the recall of English soldiers then serving under Louis XIV. The Proclamation of May 1675 ordered the 'return of all subjects who have gone into the service of the French King, soldiers, etc.' By one vote it was decided to omit the word all. So the King could 'recall out of the French service such of his subjects as he thinks fit' (Essex Papers, pp. 9, 11).

Sherley v. Fagg, 1675.

Sir John Fagg, M.P., had obtained a decision from Chancery in his case against Dr. Thomas Sherley. Sherley appealed to the House of Lords. The question at issue between the Lords and the Commons, who claimed that Fagg as a member of their House was exempt from legal processes during Parliament's session, was, after a struggle between the two Houses, only ended by the prorogation of Parliament in November 1675, the right of appeals (such as that of Sherley) to the House of Lords being established. Thus Sherley (though he did not pursue his case) won.

Danby's Anglican Policy, 1675.

A Bill to compel all office-holders and M.P.s to take an oath not to attempt any change in Church or State passes both Houses, but owing to the prorogation of Parliament does not become law.

The Importance of the Exclusion Bill.

The years 1678-1680 constitute an important epoch in the history of the English monarchy. The crisis opens with the Popish Plot and closes with the Exclusion Bills.

The Popish Plot indicated a strong popular sentiment which required expression.

The suspicions of Charles's connexion with France were based upon :

- (1) The fact that his mother and wife and the Duke of York were Roman Catholics.
- (2) The airs which the Roman Catholics in England gave themselves.

The crisis in English history which was completed by the Revolution of 1688 definitely began with the Exclusion Bill.

The first step towards the deposition of James II. was taken when James I. showed a hankering for the Spanish match. The last step was the Exclusion Bill.

1685. Ireland under Charles II.

In spite of commercial restraints Ireland had prospered.
The revenue, we are told, doubled in twenty years.

The Reign of James II.

The reign was one of great confusion. James felt his time was short, so made the most of it.

No longer is the Stuart family Calvinistic, Puritan, or Anglican; it is now openly and closely connected with Romanism.

James II.'s chief ministers at the beginning of his reign were Rochester and Sunderland.

It becomes increasingly evident that a Roman Catholic King is unfit to conduct English foreign affairs.

The fall of Halifax 'made a profound impression both at home and abroad.'

The Revolution of 1688.

The English monarchy has always been hereditary, but the nation has always exercised the right to exclude any unfit person.

A Roman Catholic King was unfit to conduct English foreign affairs, and is unfit from a political point of view. Hence the real crisis which had begun with the Exclusion Bill comes to a head in 1688.

1688. Louis XIV.'s Great Mistake.

Had he besieged Maestricht instead of Philipsburg, William of Orange's expedition to England would have been indefinitely postponed. The effect of such a postponement upon affairs in Ireland would have been most serious.
